

February 1, 2012

- ADVERTISE WITH US
- EMPLOYMENT
- CONTACT US

Guyana Times - The Beacon of Truth

THE BEACON OF TRUTH

- HOME
- TOP STORIES
- NEWS
- POLITICS
- EDITORIAL
- LETTERS
- FEATURES »
- ENTERTAINMENT
- SPORTS

You are here: Home / NEWS / NY organisation rolls out project to end gender-based violence

NY organisation rolls out project to end gender-based violence

January 29, 2012 By admin Leave a Comment

The Margaret Clemons Foundation (MCF) on Saturday rolled out the first phase of its Inside Out Witness Project, which aims to draw attention to and spark conversation about the effects of adult behaviour, particularly gender-based and child directed violence.

Human Services and Social Security Minister, Jennifer Webster interacting with the children and volunteers putting up the posters

Human Services and Social Security and Education ministers, Jennifer Webster and Priya Manickchand joined 15 Guyanese children, U.S. Ambassador Brendt Hardt and Canadian High Commissioner, David Devine, and several volunteers as they lined the sea walls at Turkeyen with artwork depicting the human eyes, symbolising the firm stance to ensure that abuse and violence against children and women do not go unnoticed.

Minister Manickchand in a brief comment emphasised that in their actions, adults need to be more conscious of the fact that children are witnessing everything, both the good and bad that are happening in society so as to ensure that negative and harmful behavioural patterns are not imparted to them. She expressed the hope that this initiative would engender the need for Guyanese to start talking about the effects of negative behaviour on children, particularly as it relates to domestic violence.

Meanwhile, Minister Webster said the project uses art to highlight the need to rid society of abuse and violence. “Recently, we have had a number of reported cases of sexual molestation of our children and it’s an area of concern; we are going to work in every possible way we can to sensitise the populace and to work along with other programmes to reduce occurrences of this nature,” she said.

U.S. Ambassador, Brendt Hardt assisting in putting up the posters as part of the Witness Programme

Clemmons, who is spearheading the project, said that the art project comes with a message, which is, “Children are the most vulnerable and impressionable witnesses to violence”.

The project is part of the global photography project by the French artist JR called “Inside Out”. MCF provided each of the 18 participants with point and shoot cameras, memory cards, journals and photography books. Clemmons said that Guyana has turned to be one of the largest global participants in the effort against gender-based and child-directed violence.

In August 2011, the Human Services Ministry partnered with the MCF to host a photography workshop for 15 children and two artists under the project theme name Witness. The MCF is a New York-based non-profit organisation with a mission to stop violence against women and children through the arts.

The posters will be plastered at 15 sites around Georgetown including the National Library, U.S. embassy, the Canadian High Commission, Help and Shelter, St Ann’s Orphanage, and the Convent.